Abstract

The purpose of this study was to investigate the status of district-level public libraries in West Bengal, India. The study focused on staff as well as services against the backdrop of collection development policy. It also investigated the problems faced by librarians and suggested measures to overcome these difficulties. The researchers used a mixed-methods approach – quantitative and qualitative methods – to obtain the data. However, the primary means of data collection was a survey method using a structured questionnaire. Additionally, interviews were carried out with librarians in order to bring more subjectivity to the results. The findings suggest that no selection committees have taken place to recruit new staff in different public libraries; hence, libraries have been suffering from a shortage of staff. Due to severe shortage of library staff, book database has not been completed in Libsys library management software in any surveyed library. Public libraries are established to provide a variety of services to their users. Thus, services are the main product of the public library system. The findings reveal that different kinds of services – such as children's, career guidance and community information services – are provided by the surveyed libraries to benefit their user communities.

Introduction

India is a diverse country with the second largest population in the world after China; it is the seventh largest country on the basis of area, with more than 1.2 billion people spread over 29 states and 7 union territories (Office of the Registrar General, 2011). West Bengal is the fourth most populous and culturally diverse state in India. Its total population is more than 91 million and the literacy rate is 77.08% (Chakraborty and Pattrea, 2016).

Public libraries in West Bengal have a long history within the Indian public library movement. The foundation and development of libraries in undivided Bengal started with the efforts of the British and various missionaries (Kumar, 2011: 62). The British played a pivotal role in inculcating interest and awareness about public libraries in West Bengal (Saha, 1988: 132). Calcutta was considered to be the central place for initiatives, movements and the development of libraries in Bengal (Nair, 2004: 120). In 1690, Job Charnock, an East India Company official, chose to establish a trading post in Calcutta. Following this, several academic institutions and libraries were set up throughout the country (Pradhan and Tripathi, 2010: 31).

Abstract

Substantial and significant extraction and proper selection of features in a machine learning model leads to more accurate result. To detect brain tumors in medical images, features like statistical Gray-Level Co-Occurrence Matrix (GLCM), Histogram of Oriented Gradients (HOG), etc., are used widely. For the same purpose, a local histogram-based new innovative feature extraction method has been proposed here. At first, an image has been divided into four quadrants. Then, every histogram-bin of each quadrant has been divided into two sub-bins. One sub-bin contains the count of each intensity present in the largest connected component while the other contains the count of each intensity present in rest of that quadrant. The extracted new feature has been combined with the classical HOG

This study traces the genesis of public libraries during the British period; the birth of National Library in India; the growth of public libraries in different districts of West Bengal; contributions of different movements in the evolution of West Bengal Public Library System and the role of Left Front government in the enactment of the West Bengal Public Library Act. The purpose of this paper is to review the significant contributions of the Britishers, European missionaries, social reformers and political parties particularly parties having left ideology in the development of public libraries in the West Bengal province of India. The paper investigates the evolution of public libraries for which authors have consulted literature published in different sources. Some of the important documents collected for this study are Annual Reports being published from the Department of Mass Education Extension and Library Services, Government of West Bengal; Census of India, etc. Apart from these sources, some other primary sources have also been used for this paper. This study contributes to have an insight knowledge in order to understand the gradual development of Public Library System in West Bengal.

Introduction

The Britishers played a pivotal role in inculcating interest and awareness about public libraries in Bengal. The development of libraries in Bengal started with the efforts of some European educationalists who settled in Calcutta as well as some of the magnificent personalities of Bengal. Initially, they established some circulating libraries for their own interest in Calcutta. In most cases, the circulating library was run by an individual owner at that time. The establishment of Calcutta Public Library is considered as a remarkable landmark in the history of the public library movement in India. Significantly, the Brahmo Samaj movement and Ramkrishna Mission movement developed many public libraries to attract the people to use public libraries for the acquirement of religious knowledge. The birth of the Bengal Library Association in undivided Bengal was the glorious phase of the real development of emerging libraries. It carried a long history of its noble achievements in the field of organized library movement in Bengal. To speak the truth, it has been an eternal source of inspiration for the movement of libraries in Bengal. This article aim to review the notable contributions of the Britishers, European missionaries, social reformers and political parties in the development of public libraries in one of the Indian states named West Bengal. The Left Front ruled the state for more than three decades precisely during 1977–2011. In the course of this long tenure, the left government has done a commendable job in the development of public libraries which will also be highlighted in this article in “Role of the Left Front (1977–2011).”

However, in the beginning, the developments during the British period will be reviewed. Notably, British missionaries had taken an interest in introducing the modern education system for the British and Indian natives in the city of Calcutta which is now known as Kolkata (Pradhan & Tripathi, 2010). Several evidences have been found that testifies the fact that it was

Objectives:

The objective of the work is to remove the CT table or other noises from: Head CT/MRI images, which are often present and effectively decrease the efficiency of further intended image processing operations.

Methods:

At first, depending on the mass an adaptive ellipse-shaped mask is generated to segment out the Region of Interest (ROI) area. Then an initial head mask has been generated using iterative morphology. Finally, head mask boundary coordinates are corrected accordingly to fully cover the head portion.

Findings:

ABSTRACT

Objectives: To develop a better method for enhancing head MRI or CT images with the objective of suppressing irrelevant information during subsequent processing. Methods: To achieve this, two innovative image enhancement techniques, 'MHE' and 'Adaptive Gamma with CCF-based Geometric Transformation', are combined. The proposed method is evaluated using a total of 76 MRI and 137 CT scan images obtained from the TCIA, OASIS, SORHM, and Brain metastases datasets. To tailor these methods for head MRI and CT images, two background masking algorithms have been introduced in this regard. Furthermore, the dark, grey,
